Japan’s commitment to prohibiting corporal punishment

In 2019 amendments were adopted to article 14(1) of the Child Abuse Prevention Law 2000 prohibiting those with parental authority from using corporal punishment; during the debate the Government stated that corporal punishment would not be allowed on any occasion. Guidelines are currently under development which will clarify the scope of the ban.

Summary of necessary legal reform to achieve full prohibition

Prohibition is still to be achieved in the home, alternative care settings, day care and penal institutions.

Article 822 of the Civil Code states that a person with parental authority “can discipline the child within limits for the purpose of supervision, care and education”. The Child Abuse Prevention Law 2000 (amended 2019) states that those with parental authority should not discipline their child “by inflicting corporal punishment upon him/her or by taking other forms of action that go beyond the scope necessary for the care and education of the child” (article 14(1), unofficial translation). This could be interpreted as limiting the prohibition to forms of corporal punishment “that go beyond the scope necessary for the care and education of the child”, which may not include ‘lighter’ forms of corporal punishment. The near universal social acceptance of corporal punishment in childrearing necessitates clarity in law that no level of corporal punishment can be considered “appropriate” or lawful. The legal defence for the use of corporal punishment should be repealed and the scope of the existing legislation should be clarified to clearly prohibit all forms of corporal punishment, however light, and other cruel or degrading forms of punishment, in the home and all other settings where adults have authority over children.

Alternative care settings – Legislation should prohibit all corporal punishment in all alternative care settings (all institutions, orphanages, places of safety, emergency care etc).

Day care – Legislation should prohibit corporal punishment in all formal early childhood care (nurseries, crèches, children’s centres, etc) and all formal day care for older children (after-school childcare, childminding, day centres, etc).

Penal institutions – Prohibition should be enacted in relation to all institutions accommodating children in conflict with the law.
Current legality of corporal punishment

Home

Corporal punishment is lawful in the home, though it is prohibited in Kawasaki City by local ordinance. According to article 820 of the Civil Code, “a person who exercises parental authority holds the right and bears the duty on care and education for the children's interests” (unofficial translation). Article 822 of the Civil Code, as amended in 2011, states (unofficial translation): “A person who exercises parental authority can discipline the child within limits for the purpose of supervision, care and education...” Article 1 of the Child Welfare Act 1947 (amended 2016) states that all citizens shall endeavour to ensure that children are “brought up in good mental and physical health” and that they shall “be kindly treated”. Article 34 lists a number of prohibited acts against children but the Act does not prohibit all corporal punishment.

The Government accepted the recommendations to prohibit all corporal punishment made during the Universal Periodic Reviews of Japan in 2008¹ and in 2012² but denied that the legal “right to discipline” allowed for corporal punishment and then stated that the law adequately protected children from “excessive” discipline.³ Prohibition was suggested in 2016 in the context of amending the Child Welfare Act 1947, but during the debate the Government argued against prohibition, stating that the current legislation provided for sufficient protection. After the adoption of the 2016 amendments, the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare published a brochure for the prevention of corporal punishment in accordance with a supplementary resolution adopted by Parliament at the same time as the amendments.⁴ Japan’s 2017 mid-term report declared “while the meaning of “corporal punishment” is not absolutely clear, the act of assault (Penal Code Article 208) and injury (Penal Code Article 204) can be punished”,⁵ but Japan then again supported recommendations to prohibit made during the UPR in 2017.⁶ The Government reported in 2018 that “abusive” corporal punishment was explicitly prohibited.⁷ Japan became a Pathfinder country with the Global Partnership to End Violence Against Children in 2018, which committed the Government to three to five years of accelerated action towards the achievement of Target 16.2 of the Sustainable Development Goals.

Amendments adopted in June 2019 amended article 14(1) of the Child Abuse Prevention Law 2000 to state (unofficial translation): “A person who exercises parental authority over a child shall not discipline the child by inflicting corporal punishment upon him/her or by taking other forms of action that go beyond the scope necessary for the care and education of the child, stipulated in the provision of Article 820 of the Civil Code, and shall give due consideration to appropriate exercise of parental authority over the child.” The amendments will come into force in April 2020. Previously, article 14(1) of the Child Abuse Prevention Law 2000 stated: “Those who exercise parental authority shall not discipline the child beyond the scope required for care and education pursuant to the provisions of Article 820 of the Civil Code and shall take into consideration the proper exercise of parental authority over the child” (unofficial translation). Article 14(2) states “Persons with parental authority cannot escape criminal punishment for the crimes of violence, injury or other crimes of abuse committed against the children simply because they have been entrusted to their parental authority.” In 2011 and again in 2012, the Government had declared that this Act obliges parents “to exercise such authority in a proper manner that will not constitute child abuse” and that the Penal Code punishes “exercise of disciplinary rights over a child [which] exceeds reasonable current social standards”. 8

In 2019 during debates on the Bill amending the Child Abuse Prevention Law 2000 and the Child Welfare Act 1947, the Government stated that corporal punishment would not be allowed on any occasion. 9 However, the Laws as amended do not define “corporal punishment” and the phrasing of article 14(1) of the Child Abuse Prevention Law 2000 as amended could be interpreted as limiting the prohibition to forms of corporal punishment “that go beyond the scope necessary for the care and education of the child”, which may not include ‘lighter’ forms of corporal punishment. Concerns have also been raised that the scope of the prohibition is too narrow and would not necessarily apply to all settings, including care settings. In addition, the Government stated during the debates that the amendments did not encompass all non-physical forms of punishment, including psychological punishment, as “significantly violent language” (unofficial translation) was already prohibited under article 2 of the Child Abuse Prevention Law 2000. 10

A Supplementary Resolution was also adopted in June 2019 which stated that the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare would develop guidelines including concrete examples of the prohibited behaviours and referring to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Resolution further committed the Government to raise awareness of the harmful effects of corporal punishment to the general public and provide parents with information and support on alternative methods of discipline. The draft guidelines were issued in December 2019 after being adopted by the committee on the “Promotion of Parenting without Corporal Punishment” under the Ministry of Health, Labour, and Welfare. The guidelines reportedly refer to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, defining corporal punishment as punishment that causes some degree of pain or discomfort, however light and stating that other humiliating and degrading punishments also violate children’s rights. They also reportedly state that no one should use corporal punishment of children, regardless of parental authority. 11 The guidelines will now be open to public comments and then finalised before the 2019 amendments come into force on 1 April 2020. The Government has declared that the existing right to discipline under the Civil Code would be reviewed within two years of the amendments coming into force. As of December 2019, the defence was under discussion in the Legislative Council.

It has been reported that in March 2019 the Tokyo Metropolitan Government adopted an ordinance banning corporal punishment and other degrading treatment against children by guardians 12 – we have been unable to check this text.

Alternative care settings

Corporal punishment is lawful under the power of those with parental authority to punish and discipline children in the Civil Code and the Child Abuse Prevention Law (see under “Home”). Article 14(1) of the Child Abuse Prevention Law 2000 (as amended in June 2019) may prohibit corporal punishment in alternative care settings – we are awaiting the publication of explanatory guidelines.

Amendments adopted in June 2019 have amended the Child Welfare Act 1947 to explicitly prohibit corporal punishment by heads of child guidance centres (article 33-2(2)) and by heads of child welfare institutions and foster parents (article 47-3), but there seems to be no explicit prohibition of corporal punishment in any other forms of alternative care and the exact meaning of “corporal punishment” within those amendments is still to be clarified.

The Government stated in 2018 that article 33-11 of the Child Welfare Act 1947 prohibited all corporal punishment in custody facilities but then reported that “abuse” was prohibited under the Act. Minimum Standards for Child Welfare Facilities 1948 address abuse of disciplinary methods but do not prohibit corporal punishment. On 29 March 2012, the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare renewed guidelines for the management of alternative care facilities which recommend that management guidelines for such facilities should state that corporal punishment should not be used – but these are guidelines and not law.

Day care

Corporal punishment is lawful in formal early childhood care (nurseries, crèches, children’s centres etc) and formal care for older children (after-school childcare, childminding, etc) under the power of those with parental authority to punish and discipline children in the Civil Code and the Child Abuse Prevention Law (see under “Home”). Article 14(1) of the Child Abuse Prevention Law 2000 (as amended in June 2019) may prohibit corporal punishment in day care settings – we are awaiting the publication of explanatory guidelines.

Amendments adopted in June 2019 have amended the Child Welfare Act 1947 to explicitly prohibit corporal punishment by heads of child welfare institutions (article 47-3) – this includes nursery centres, children’s recreational facilities and day care for children with disabilities. There seems to be no explicit prohibition of corporal punishment in any other forms of day care and the exact meaning of “corporal punishment” within those amendments is still to be clarified.

In 2009, the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare renewed its guidelines for the management of day care facilities: the Manual for the guidelines state that corporal punishment should not be used in childcare but there is no prohibition in the law.

Schools

Corporal punishment is prohibited in schools under article 11 of the Education Law 1947, which states that disciplinary punishment may be inflicted but “in no case is corporal punishment permitted” (art. 11). A ruling by the Tokyo High Court on 1 April 1981 suggested this provision did not prohibit all physical punishment in all cases, and in 2007 a ministerial guideline issued to public schools relied on this in suggesting that some forms of physical punishment may be permitted in some circumstances. In 2012 and again in 2017, the Government asserted that the said article of the Education Law “strictly prohibits corporal punishment” and that Ministerial guidelines and training support this, but did not comment on the High Court ruling.\(^\text{14}\) In 2014, the Government reported it was continuing its efforts to completely ban corporal punishment in schools.\(^\text{15}\)

Penal institutions

Corporal punishment is lawful as a disciplinary measure in penal institutions. The Constitution 1946 prohibits cruel punishments and the Act on Penal Detention Facilities and Treatment of Inmates and Detainees 2005 provides for the maintenance of discipline in penal institutions, but there is no explicit prohibition of corporal punishment.

The Government reported in 2018 that provisions in the Juvenile Training School Act, the Juvenile Classification Home Act (Penal Institutions) and the Act on Penal Detention Facilities and the Treatment of Inmates and Detainees 2005 prohibited corporal punishment in juvenile training schools and other penal institutions:\(^\text{16}\) we have been unable to confirm this in regards to the first two Acts mentioned. As stated above, there is no explicit prohibition of all corporal punishment in the Act on Penal Detention Facilities and Treatment of Inmates and Detainees 2005.

Article 14(1) of the Child Abuse Prevention Law 2000 (as amended in June 2019) may prohibit corporal punishment in penal institutions – we are awaiting the publication of explanatory guidelines.

Sentence for crime

Corporal punishment is unlawful as a sentence for crime. There is no provision for corporal punishment in the Penal Code or the Criminal Procedure Code.

Universal Periodic Review of Japan’s human rights record

Japan was examined in the first cycle of the Universal Periodic Review in 2008 (session 2). The following recommendation was made:\(^\text{17}\)

> “Prohibit expressly all forms of corporal punishment of children and promote positive and non-violent forms of discipline (Italy)”

Japan accepted this recommendation. However, Japan’s mid-term progress report in 2011 simply describes existing law on the issue and gives no indication of any progress towards prohibiting all corporal punishment of children.\(^\text{18}\)

Examination in the second cycle took place in 2012 (session 14). The national report describes legal provisions aimed at ensuring parental discipline is “reasonable” and does not amount to “child

“Expressly prohibit corporal punishment in all settings (Hungary)”

The Government accepted the recommendation.\textsuperscript{21} However its 2017 mid-term report reported only on the criminalisation of assault and injury and stated that the “meaning of “corporal punishment” [was] not absolutely clear”.\textsuperscript{22}

“Explicitly prohibit corporal punishment in all settings by law (Montenegro);

“Step up efforts to combat violence against children, including prohibition of corporal punishment (Russian Federation)”

The Government supported the recommendations.\textsuperscript{24}

\section*{Recommendations by human rights treaty bodies}

\textit{Committee on the Rights of the Child}

(1 February 2019, CRC/C/JPN/CO/4-5 Advance unedited version, Concluding observations on fourth/fifth report, paras. 4, 25 and 26)

“The Committee reminds the State party of the indivisibility and interdependence of all the rights enshrined in the Convention and emphasizes the importance of all the recommendations contained in the present concluding observations. The Committee would like to draw the State party’s attention to the recommendations concerning the following areas, in respect of which urgent measures must be taken: ... corporal punishment (para. 26)...”

“The Committee notes that corporal punishment in schools is prohibited by law. However, it is seriously concerned that:

(a) The prohibition in schools is not effectively implemented;

(b) Corporal punishment in the home and in alternative care settings is not fully prohibited by law;

(c) The Civil Code and the Child Abuse Prevention Act, particularly, allow the use of appropriate discipline and are unclear as to the permissibility of corporal punishment.

“With reference to its general comment No. 8 (2006) on corporal punishment, the Committee recalls its previous concluding recommendation (para. 48) and urges the State party to:

(a) Explicitly and fully prohibit all corporal punishment, however light, in law, particularly in the Child Abuse Prevention Act and the Civil Code, in all settings, including in the home, in alternative care and day care settings and in penal institutions;

(b) Strengthen its measures to eliminate corporal punishment in practice in all settings, including by intensifying its awareness-raising campaigns and promoting positive, non-violent and participatory forms of child-rearing and discipline.”

Committee on the Rights of the Child
(20 June 2010, CRC/C/JPN/CO/3, Concluding observations on third report, paras. 7, 8, 47, 48, 56 and 57)

“The Committee welcomes the efforts made by the State party to address some of the concerns and recommendations (CRC/C/15/Add.231) made upon consideration of the State party’s second report (CRC/C/104/Add.2) in February 2004, but regrets that a number of them have not been fully implemented or have not been addressed at all. The Committee reiterates those concerns and recommendations in the present document.

“The Committee urges the State party to make every effort to address the recommendations it made in its concluding observations on the second periodic report which have not yet been implemented (including those contained in … paragraph 35 on corporal punishment …) and to comprehensively address the concerns contained in the present concluding observations.

“While noting the explicit prohibition of corporal punishment in schools, the Committee expresses concern at reports that the prohibition is not effectively implemented. The Committee notes with concern the ambiguous ruling of the Tokyo High Court in 1981 which refrained from prohibiting all physical punishment. Furthermore, it is concerned that corporal punishment in the home and in alternative care settings is not expressly prohibited by law and that the Civil Code and the Child Abuse Prevention Law, particularly, allow the use of appropriate discipline and are unclear as to the admissibility of corporal punishment.

“The Committee strongly recommends that the State party:

a) explicitly prohibit corporal punishment and all forms of degrading treatment of children in all settings by law, including the home and alternative care settings;

b) effectively implement the ban on corporal punishment in all settings;

c) undertake communications programmes, including campaigns, to educate families, teachers, and other professionals working with and for children on alternative, non-violent forms of discipline.

“The Committee welcomes measures such as amendments to the Child Abuse Prevention Law and the Child Welfare Law, which provide and enforce mechanisms for the prevention of abuse. The Committee remains concerned, however, that the notion of ‘parental authority’ giving the right to exercise ‘comprehensive control’ in the Civil Code as well as undue parental expectations, puts children at risk of violence at home. It notes with concern that the incidence of child abuse continues to rise.

“The Committee recommends that the State party strengthen current efforts to address the problem of child abuse, including by:

a) conducting public education programmes about the negative consequences of abuse and neglect and preventive programmes, including family development programmes, promoting positive, non-violent forms of discipline....”
Committee on the Rights of the Child
(26 February 2004, CRC/C/15/Add.231, Concluding observations on second report, paras. 35 and 36)

“The Committee notes with concern that corporal punishment, although legally prohibited in schools, is widely practised in schools, institutions and the family.

“The Committee recommends that the State party:

a) prohibit corporal punishment in institutions and the home;

b) carry out public education campaigns about the negative consequences of ill-treatment of children in order to change attitudes towards corporal punishment, and promote positive, non-violent forms of discipline in schools, institutions and at home as an alternative to such punishment;

c) strengthen complaints mechanisms for children in institutions and schools to ensure that they deal with complaints of ill-treatment effectively and in a child-sensitive manner.”

Committee on the Rights of the Child
(5 June 1998, CRC/C/15/Add.90, Concluding observations on initial report, paras. 24 and 45)

“The Committee is concerned at the frequency and level of violence in schools, especially the widespread use of corporal punishment and the existence of numerous cases of bullying among students. While legislation prohibiting corporal punishment and such measures as hot lines for victims of bullying do exist, the Committee notes with concern that current measures have been insufficient to prevent school violence.

“In light of, inter alia, articles 3, 19 and 28.2 of the Convention, the Committee recommends that a comprehensive programme be devised and its implementation closely monitored in order to prevent violence in schools, especially with a view to eliminating corporal punishment and bullying. Additionally, it recommends that corporal punishment be prohibited by law in the family and in child-care and other institutions. The Committee also recommends that awareness-raising campaigns be conducted to ensure that alternative forms of discipline are administered in a manner consistent with the child’s human dignity and in conformity with the Convention.”

Committee Against Torture
(28 June 2013, CAT/C/JPN/CO/2, Concluding observations on second report, para. 23)

“Noting that child abuse is prohibited under article 3 of the Act on Child Abuse Prevention, the Committee shares concern raised by the Committee on the Rights of Child (CRC/C/JPN/CO/3, para. 47) that corporal punishment in the home and in alternative care settings is not expressly prohibited by law and that the Civil Code and the Act on Child Abuse Prevention allow the use of appropriate discipline and are unclear as to the admissibility of corporal punishment in some cases (art. 16).

The State party should explicitly prohibit corporal punishment and all forms of degrading treatment of children in all settings by law.”

Human Rights Committee
(20 August 2014, CCPR/C/JPN/CO/6, Concluding observations on sixth report, para. 25)

“The Committee observes that corporal punishment is only prohibited explicitly in schools, and expresses concern at its prevalence and social acceptance (arts. 7 and 24).
The State party should take practical steps, including through legislative measures, where appropriate, to put an end to corporal punishment in all settings. It should encourage non-violent forms of discipline as alternatives to corporal punishment, and should conduct public information campaigns to raise awareness about its harmful effects.”

Prevalence/attitudinal research in the last ten years

According to an online survey of 20,000 respondents aged 20 or older by Save the Children Japan in July 2017, 60% think that hitting children is an acceptable form of discipline. Nearly 60 percent said they would tolerate yelling at children and 50 percent said they would tolerate glaring. Of the 1,030 respondents with children, 70% said they had hit them for disciplinary purposes.

A survey was conducted by the Chiba Prefectural Board of Education in the 2017 academic year covering roughly 496,000 students at 1,165 public schools, but the education board withheld results regarding the number of students who said they were subject to or witnessed corporal punishment, and stated that there were no suspected physical punishment cases found in follow-up surveys by schools. It has been reported, however, that there were four guidance measures taken in connection with physical punishment cases during the academic year, including a reprimand, none of which were reportedly mentioned in the survey responses.

(“308 school students in Chiba Pref. felt ‘sexual harassment’ by teachers: survey”, The Mainichi, 11 June 2018 https://mainichi.jp/english/articles/20180611/p2a/00m/0na/006000c)

A Government survey of public, national and private schools found that in the 2012-2013 academic year, 6,721 teachers at 4,152 schools nationwide inflicted corporal punishment on 14,208 students. Eighty per cent of the teachers were in public schools; only 3% were disciplined for their use of corporal punishment. In elementary schools, 60% of corporal punishment cases took place during class. In junior high and high schools, just over 20% of cases took place in class, and 40% took place during club activities. In 60% of cases, teachers hit students with their hands, in 10% teachers kicked students. Other forms of corporal punishment included punching students and hitting them with a stick or other object. In 20% of cases, children were physically injured, including fractures, sprains and eardrum damage.

(Reported in The Japan Times, 10 August 2013)

In a survey of 510 college athletes (427 male and 83 female), 62% said violent punishment is acceptable in school athletics programmes. One third (33%) said they had been physically punished at school. Students who had been physically punished were more likely to think violent punishment was acceptable (73% of those who had been physically punished compared to 57% of those who had not) and to say they would use violence if they became a teacher or athletics coach.

(Reported in The Asahi Shimbun, 13 May 2013)

According to Japan’s report to the UN Human Rights Committee in 2012, the number of cases of corporal punishment in schools handled by human rights organisations was 211 in 2006, 263 in 2007, 198 in 2008, 268 in 2009 and 337 in 2010.

(9 October 2012, CCPR/C/JPN/6, Sixth state party report to the Human Rights Committee, para. 312)

In a survey of parents conducted by a national newspaper in August 2010, 58% of respondents regarded physical punishment as a necessary tool in childrearing.
In a survey of 1,592 first- and second-year university students, 1.4% reported being slapped, kicked, punched or having something thrown at them by a teacher “often” or “very often” when they were at school.
